

As human beings, we are all made so beautifully unique.

There's no mold that can fit
us all.

So why do
we try to fit ourselves
into one?

We take the parts of us that make us us - physically or in personality - and minimize them to "fit in."

It can be uncomfortable. Even painful.

So why do we do it?

Why do we decide that the value of the way others are made is higher than our own?

Why, when differences are beautiful and should be celebrated?

And no one wants to squeeze into a box anyways.
